Team Building and Participation

Cheryl Rondeau-Bassett, Instructor

Learning to work together is a challenge in organizations and the workplace today. Like building a house, building a team starts from the ground up using diverse talents, skills, and personal working styles of the individual participant. Strong teams develop an atmosphere of open communication, trust and accountability in the mist of this variety.

In this seminar, you will: learn how to form a team, identify the role and responsibilities of the members, and work with different personality types. Create ways to encourage teamwork through open communication. Learn how to handle conflicts effectively and develop decision-making skills.

Objectives:

- Communicate in a team; identify the factors affecting team communication, and use supportive and effective communication.
- Identify how verbal and nonverbal communication work together, use active listening skills, and respond productively to input.
- Resolve and handle team conflicts by using different conflict resolution styles.
- Identify rules for collective decision-making, the elements of team decision-making, and use different decision-making methods.

Pre-registration is required

Space is limited to 30.
